The newly created We Want Our Future initiative announces the release of free education materials to school teachers and community leaders around the globe. The materials include a letter from former astronaut Joe Tanner, activity instructions for the students, a blank postcard template, and an inspirational video created by 2-time Emmy award winning producer George Schellenger.

The materials can be found on the outreach initiative's website, <http://WeWantOurFuture.org>. When asked about the video and working with an award winning producer, initiative Director Bradley Cheetham said "This video is the first step to inspire our future engineers and scientists. We're very excited to get this out to students across the planet!"

With the release of these materials, anyone can get involved to help give a voice to our nation's youth in determining their future in space exploration. Educators from across the country are already excited by the release "Now is the time to get those kids involved." said Bellflower, California elementary school teacher Pam Leestma. "Their [Student's] excitement and future commitment to space exploration has the ability to carry them for a lifetime. We all love investing our efforts in this next generation! It is so fun to see the sparkle in their eyes when they discover new ideas." By collecting over 100,000 postcards from youth across the USA and around the world, volunteers can impact the emerging generations who will shape our future. At WeWantOurFuture.org, the goal is to change the future through inspirational and fun activities for students of all ages.

About WeWantOurFuture.org

WeWantOurFuture.org is a grassroots educational initiative that aims to get elementary through high school age students inspired and energized about their studies using space exploration. The program plans to collect 100,000+ postcards from students across the country, in which each student draws his or her hope for the future of space. The ultimate goal is to present these postcards publicly, representing a unified voice of our youth and their thoughts on the future of exploration. In completing this project, we will inspire youth to dream big, ask for help, and never give up. The initiative is a non-profit status organization based in Colorado, USA.
